A few years ago a newspaper published at sea would have been inconceivable, but the passengers on the Cunard liner Etruria, on a recent trip from New York to Liverpool, after six days out, enjoyed reading a paper printed on shipboard and containing bulletins of the most important news of the world. The paper was made up from dispatches prepared by the Reuter agency and transmitted by wireless telegraph to the vessel. Shortly before midnight of February 6th, the Cunarder being about 70 miles distant from the Irish coast, the wireless instruments began to work, and summaries of what was going on in the world came vibrating on board. Most of the passengers were asleep at the time, but the editorial staff was wide awake, and everything was in readiness for printing the paper when the news had been received.

Purser McCubbin acted as editor, and handled the dispatches which Operator Hughes received. A. Hurris, ship's printer, set up the matter in type, and Assistant Purser H. D. Stainer undertook the job of circulation manager. The original 500 copies that were struck off were seized quickly as souvenirs.—Chronicle.
